Question 12

This year marked the 50th anniversary of the damming of Tasmania's Lake Pedder and renewed calls for its restoration. Interestingly, it also coincides with the United Nations' Decade on Ecosystem Restoration, which aims to "prevent, halt and reverse the degradation of ecosystems on every continent and in every ocean". While Lake Pedder's restoration would be expensive and logistically complex, environmental scientists such as Robin Wall Kimmerer remind us that restoration is important not only "for polluted waters and degraded lands, but also for our relationship to the world. We need to restore honor to the way we live, so that when we walk through the world we don't have to avert our eyes with shame".

Discuss human interactions with the natural environment and the factors that have influenced these interactions over time. In your response consider the role of outdoor leaders to increase connection with the natural environment and improve human-nature relationships.

(30 minutes)

OR

Question 13

Social media imagery and location identification has exposed Tasmania's wild places to the world, increasing visitor numbers and potentially the risk of degradation. There has been a call to reduce social media exposure of these fragile and pristine areas.

Discuss human interactions with the natural environment and the part technology has played in changing attitudes towards natural places and the way people use them. In your response consider the role of the outdoor leader to increase connection with the natural environment and improve human-nature relationships.
